BUU11540 Fundamentals of Philosophy, Ethics and Social Science 2020/2021

(10 ECTS credits)

Module Content/Outline

This module is an introduction to a broad range of topics within philosophy, ethics, and the social sciences. It arms students with the conceptual tools needed to frame and evaluate challenging questions about what we should do in business and society at large.

In the Michaelmas semester, we focus on understanding various wrongs with an emphasis on those we are likely to encounter in business (e.g., imposing risks, corruption, exploitation). We will discuss both what these kinds of behaviour are and what's bad about them, as well as how they might be avoided and what should happen when they are not.

In the Hillary semester, the focus shifts towards our positive obligations to others and how best to use social institutions to satisfy them. This requires us to engage with economic and political theory, and it calls us to question not only the grounds for and scope of our duties but also the ways that historical and economic factors influence the roles of the market and the state.

Learning Outcomes

LO1: Become familiar with the primary philosophical methodology of reasoning and conceptual analysis.

LO2: Become familiar with current issues and methodology in social science, particularly in economics, sociology, and political theory.

LO3: Leverage the conceptual tools of ethics and political theory to frame and understand challenging normative questions in contemporary business contexts.

LO4: Develop critical thinking, reading, and writing skills on contemporary business-ethical debates including the extent of our personal, economic, and political obligations. L

O5: Develop an ability to discuss these challenging issues productively with peers.

BUU11540 Fundamentals of Philosophy, Ethics, and Social Science Assignment Example TCD Ireland

The world is today being served by a set of philosophies that are easy to understand but too difficult to apply. The philosophy of naturalism is what we call naturalism in the free will perspective. This is the philosophy that says that the universe, nature, and people are all perfect and unique. It also says that we don't have control over our own lives and that we can't help everyone who meets them. Another philosophical perspective that is now being accepted is the philosophy of science which is based on free will and the belief that everything is a product of science. This multidisciplinary perspective tells us how everything is connected and something worth investigating.

One of the most important things to remember about philosophy, ethics, and social science is that they are all about understanding how people think and behave. By exploring different concepts and theories, we can come to a better understanding of the world around us and how we fit into it.

Another important thing to keep in mind is that these subjects are constantly evolving. As our understanding of ourselves and the world around us grows, so too does our understanding of philosophy, ethics, and social science. This means that there is always something new to learn and explore in these fields.

LAW37470 Advanced International Law - The Law of Int Organisations

Academic Year 2021/2022

This module examines the legal regimes governing and produced by inter-governmental organisations. This includes a consideration of the legal and conceptual nature of such organisations. It seeks to discern unity, while recognising that each organisation has its individual legal characteristics. Issues to be considered include the constitutional base, legal personality, legal powers, membership issues, voting, decision making, legal orders, accountability, responsibility, democracy, as well as emerging concerns over global governance, constitutionalisation, as well as the trend towards so-called "global administrative law". A primary focus, at least initially, will be on the United Nations system. However, this course will consider a whole range of IGOs, including the World Health Organisation (WHO), the International Monetary Fund (IMF), the World Bank (IBRD), the World Trade Organisation (WTO), the European Union (EU), the Organisation of American States (OAS), and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation (NATO).

The themes that run throughout the module are:

- The impact of international organisations on the international legal order;
- The impact of international organisations on state sovereignty;
- The theoretical underpinnings of international institutional law;
- The legal nature of international organisations - are they founded upon contracts or constitutions?
- The legal consequences of international organisations being legal persons;
- The legal order produced by international organisations and their interrelationship;
- The common legal features governing the establishment and activities of international organisations.

In doing so, we will focus on key issues such as the extent of their jurisdiction, their relationships with States, and the exercise of power within them.

The law of international organisations is a complex and evolving area. However, it is an increasingly important field, given the ever-growing number of international organisations and their impact on world affairs.
